Improving the Lives of Animals

Working in the Community to Preserve the Human-Animal Bond

Like many organizations, the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic presented significant challenges for Toronto Humane Society. 2020 and 2021 have been challenging years to say the least. In addition to the challenges we have faced as an organization, the onset of the pandemic has made societal and community-based challenges all the more apparent. For many, the affordability of pet care is out of reach and in years past, these animals would have been forced to leave their loving homes and enter an animal shelter. But thanks to you, Toronto Humane Society can work to prevent this troubling cycle from continuing.

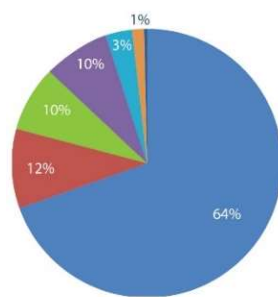

With the guidance of our Strategic Plan, each and every day we fight to improve the lives of animals. This fight does not only include the animals under our direct care. We work to strengthen the human-animal bond and to find new ways to preserve it. We are fortunate for the support we have from members like you and because of that support, we are able to keep more animals out of the shelter system, and with the families that love them. It is through programs like our Pet Parent Support Network, Public Veterinary Services and Pet Food Bank that we support community pets and their guardians. It is thanks to you and your continued support that hundreds of animals have not entered the shelter system, and instead stayed with the families they love dearly.
