

How to Choose a Trainer

Choosing a dog trainer can be one of the most important decisions that you make in your dog's life. The techniques that a trainer uses can strongly affect how you interact with your dog for years to come. Therefore, it is important to select your trainer wisely. Remember, training should be a fun experience for both you and your dog. Here are some guidelines for helping you to make your decision.

Reward-based training

There are numerous ways to train dogs. In addition, each animal has their own learning style and preferred motivators. The American Veterinary Society of Animal Behavior (AVSAB) endorses training methods that allow animals to work for things (e.g., food, play, affection) that motivate them rather than techniques that focus on using fear or pain to punish them for undesirable behaviours. Look for a trainer who uses primarily or only reward-based training with treats, toys, and play. Stay away from trainers who advocate methods of physical force that can harm your pet, such as hanging dogs by their collars or hitting them with their hands, feet, or leashes.

Research shows that dogs do not need to be physically punished to learn how to behave, and there are significant risks associated with using punishment (such as inhibiting learning, increasing fear, and/or stimulating aggressive events). Therefore, trainers who routinely use choke collars, pinch collars, shock collars, and other methods of physical punishment as a primary training method should be avoided.

Certification

Choose a trainer who demonstrates commitment to a humane hierarchy when recommending training interventions. Punishment should not be used as a general first-line approach. Larger and well-regarded certification councils such as (but not limited to) the Certification Council for Professional Dog Trainers and the International Association of Animal Behavior Consultants require their certificants to adhere to a humane hierarchy and strict code of conduct.

The use of punishment generally assumes that animals always know exactly what humans expect of them and are willfully disobeying. In fact, animals are often disobeying because people have accidentally reinforced the wrong behaviours or have not clearly communicated the appropriate behaviours. No learner wants to be in a situation where they have to constantly be afraid of making a mistake. Trainers certified through well respected certification bodies recognize that competence-based training follows a hierarchy in which punishment is generally a very last resort.

Good teacher

A good instructor should explain what behaviour they are training, why it is important, and then demonstrate it. In a class situation, they should provide ample time in class to practice and individually assist students. They should be able to adapt their humane training methods to the individual dog. Class sizes should be small to ensure individual attention, or assistants should be helping with the classes.

Continual education

Look for a trainer who demonstrates continual self education. A conscientious trainer will keep up to date with new training theories and methods, and may attend workshops and conferences.

Respectful

A good trainer should be personable and respectful of both you and your dog. Avoid trainers who recommend using physical force (e.g. alpha rolling, pushing a dog into position, hitting, choke chain or pinch collar correction) or methods/devices that have the potential for harm as an acceptable way to train. Additionally, avoid trainers who make you feel bad about the speed of progress that your dog is making. (See AVSAB's Position Statement on Humane Dog Training on the AVSAB website.)

Observe a class

Always ask to observe a class before attending. You need to make sure that the teaching style of the instructor will work with how you learn. Also, watch the students and their dogs. Are they having fun or looking stressed? Are dogs' tails up and wagging or down and/or tucked? Are the people talking with their dogs in happy, upbeat voices or are they scolding or even yelling at them? Talk to the current students—are they enjoying the class and feel that their dogs are learning? If a trainer does not allow you to observe a class, ask yourself (and the trainer) why.

Do you feel comfortable?

Ultimately, you should feel comfortable doing whatever it is the trainer asks you to do to your dog. If your trainer ever tells you to do something to your dog that you believe will cause you or your dog undue harm or distress, ask them to explain why they recommend that technique, what the potential drawbacks of the technique are and how these will be addressed should they occur. Alternatively, you could ask for another option.

There are no guarantees

Because of the variable and often unpredictable nature of behaviour, a conscientious trainer cannot and will not guarantee the results of training. However, they should be willing to ensure satisfaction of their services.

Vaccinations

A good instructor will take care to protect the dogs in a class situation. They should have vaccine requirements for the dogs, and should discourage owners from bringing sick dogs to class.

Problem behaviours

When dealing with problem behaviours, such as biting and fighting, destructiveness, etc., a good trainer should feel comfortable collaborating with your veterinarian and should know when to seek help from other professionals. Many behavioural changes are caused by underlying physical problems, and a proficient trainer may ask you to visit your veterinarian for medical testing. In addition, many behaviour problems are medical disorders that require diagnosis and treatment by a veterinarian. Your veterinarian may consider adding medication to your pet's behaviour modification plan once their situation has been completely assessed. Unless a trainer is a veterinarian, they do not have the medical background to recommend specific medications or to assess the possible risks and benefits of using medications in individual animals.
