Treating Sisters With Panleukopenia

Corrin and his sister, Mishka, were discovered as strays, arriving at the shelter weighing less than 300g. Swiftly placed in foster care upon their arrival, these tiny siblings faced a sudden decline in health after just a few days.

Recognizing the urgency, their foster parent promptly returned them to the shelter for intensive medical attention, leading to a diagnosis of the deadly virus Parvo, also known as Panleukopenia in kittens. Despite the dedicated efforts of the medical team, Mishka tragically did not survive.

In critical condition, Corrin's remarkable foster parent took him back into their care, providing round-the-clock attention that ultimately saved his life. Today, Corrin thrives and is happy and healthy, a testament to the unwavering commitment of his exceptional foster caregiver.

Tommy's Journey to a Forever Home

Tommy, an 11-year-old feline, arrived on November 27th, 2023. Struggling with a decreased appetite, high fear and anxiety levels, and resistance to medication in the shelter environment, Tommy faced challenges that required specialized care.

Recognizing the urgency of Tommy's situation, the veterinary team swiftly performed a necessary dental surgery. Understanding the additional support Tommy needed, the decision was made to place him in foster care and Mike Milne, a feline care volunteer, took him home.

Tommy's reluctance to eat persisted, even after the dental surgery. Mike collaborated closely with our training team to encourage Tommy to eat and successfully administer medication.

Tommy's journey took a heartwarming turn, and finally, on February 3rd, 2024, Tommy found his forever home. This heartening tale showcases the pivotal role of foster parents like Mike Milne, whose dedication and collaboration with specialists played a crucial part in Tommy's recovery and ultimate adoption. It underscores the transformative impact that fostering has on the lives of animals, ensuring they receive personalized care and support, paving the way for brighter futures in loving homes.
